

Haunted Graveyards of the Ozarks

“If you know the stories, it’s hard to walk among the headstones of an Ozark cemetery without pausing in reverence or running in terror.”

From the neatly tended urban necropolis to the long-forgotten family plot at the end of a winding gravel road, these “quiet cities” of the Ozarks have the power to send chills up and down the spine of the most hardened skeptic.

Be it the restless Civil War soldiers of Greenbrier, the mass murderer who stalks Peace Church or the red eyes that persecute visitors to Robinson, tales of ghostly activity abound in every burial ground carved out of the ancient Ozark hills. Follow Dave Harkins as he explores the fascinating history and unsettling lore clinging to these haunted graveyards.

Brief Author Bio

Originally from Fresno, California, David Harkins now resides in the Ozark Mountains of Missouri. In 1980, David helped launch an occult bookstore in Fresno that is still in operation today. During the early years at the bookstore, folks would come into the shop and share stories of their homes being haunted by things they believed to be of a paranormal nature. With a fascination with all things occult and paranormal, David began investigating these claims of supposed paranormal activity and soon got hooked on the fact that some of these claims may actually be occurring.

After moving to the Ozark Mountains in 1985, David began investigating different locations in the Ozarks and eventually encountered others with the same interest in the paranormal. In 2006, after meeting more folks in the area with a strong lure to the paranormal, David founded The Ozarks Paranormal Society (TOPS). Since forming TOPS, David has been featured on radio, print and television. Most notably, he and his team were featured on the Travel Channel program Legends of the Ozarks investigating the activity at Wilson’s Creek National Battlefield near Springfield, Missouri. In 2013, The Ozarks Paranormal Society became official family members of the world-renowned paranormal team The Atlantic Paranormal Society (TAPS).
